The Catholic Social Science Review is abstracted in Religious and Theological Abstracts and is indexed in The Catholic Periodical and Literature Index.

Guidelines for Contributors: The editors will consider for publication in The Catholic Social Science Review articles, book reviews, review essays, etc. in the social sciences or in the humanities (if dealing with social questions) that combine high quality scholarship and compatibility with the Church's Magisterium. A prospective contributor of a symposium, article, or documentation piece to the Review can submit materials to the appropriate editor either by an e-mail attachment (Microsoft Word and Wordperfect) or by mailing a 3-1/2 inch disk. Submissions for the Public and Church Affairs section must address specific public or Church policy questions or issue areas. All submissions of regular articles, symposium submissions, Public and Church Affairs articles, and review essays (not a regular book review or documentation material) must include an abstract of approximately 100 words.

Regular articles and symposium submissions should be 5,000 words or less, including notes; book reviews should normally be 1000 words or less, and articles for the documentation section no more than 1500. Longer submissions will be considered. The notes must appear as endnotes. Submissions should conform to the Chicago Manual of Style, and for specific stylistic guidelines unique to the CSSR, please see the website (www.catholicsocialscientists.org).

Graphs and illustrations should be placed at the end of the manuscript, one to a page, with their locations and captions clearly indicated in the text of the manuscript. Acceptance of a manuscript for publication may be conditioned on the author's making changes deemed necessary or desirable by the Editorial Board.

The Review appears in October/November each year, and submissions made by December 1 have the best chance of appearing in the upcoming issue, unless that issue is already filled.
